— OBSERV Each other sólo debe emplearse cuando se trata de dos personas. Si hay una más, ha de decirse one another.

— OBSERV The reciprocal sense of each other is often conveyed in Spanish by a simple reflexive verb: they greeted each other se saludaron. This may, however, result in ambiguity in Spanish between the reciprocal and the reflexive meanings: se hirieron can mean «they hurt each other» or «they hurt themselves». In this case «they hurt each other» would be better translated by se hirieron uno a otro.

— OBSERV The appropriate preposition must be inserted as follows: they laughed at each other se han reído uno de otro.

— OBSERV Two alternative translations expressing the idea of reciprocal action are mutuamente and recíprocamente: they envy each other se envidian mutuamente.

— OBSERV El verbo to get tiene el pretérito y el participio pasivo irregulares, got. Además de éste, en Estados Unidos se usa también la forma gotten para el participio pasivo.

— OBSERV Cuando el verbo to get va seguido por un gerundio se traduce por ponerse a o empezar a: once he gets speaking you can't stop him cuando se pone a hablar, no hay quien lo pare.

— OBSERV En muchos casos, cuando el verbo to get antecede un adjetivo o un participio pasivo, se traduce al castellano por un simple verbo: to get old envejecer; to get drunk emborracharse; to get fat engordar; to get killed matarse; to get one's hands dirty ensuciarse las manos.

— OBSERV In some Latin-American countries the word coger is not in decent use. It is substituted therefore by agarrar.
